She rode out, and enjoyed the novelty greatly. To day she is reading and writing.
Fortunately Cousin, Louisa, is with us, and able to do all that could be done for the prostrate patient.
Mays' happiness, too, added to soften our anxieties.
Your letter came in the midst of our troubles, and found me without heart or

"Poem." which was read by me on that occasion.

A corrected version of this will appear in "the Boston Daily Advertiser" of tomorrow morning.

The occasion was one of much interest and satisfaction to myself and townspeople.

I imagine you are returned to your studies and Cloyes, where I like to think of you, next to seeing you here. Can't you ride up some Saturday and indulge us with that pleasure?

We have concluded to stay here through the coming winter, and I am to remain mostly at home, defending my town Wayland till Spring at least.

The Hall is quite comfortable, riding out occasionally days. We have happy letters from May. Louisa is now composed, and Anna and my boy are with us, having had a months recreation at Conway.

It would have enhanced my delight had I caught you face in the crowd of Jane people

head to answer all hope and trust entirely on doors again.

I hope you are having a summer of satisfaction, and may return to your chosen employ and duties with invigorated health, and the charming spirits with which you are wont to regale your friends.

Affectionately yours,

A. Harrison Scott.
